

College of International Security Affairs
National Defense University

Matthew P. Dearing, Ph.D

Assistant Professor

Department of Regional and Analytical Studies

Education

- Ph.D. in security studies from the Naval Postgraduate School.
- M.A. in regional security studies from the Naval Postgraduate School.
- B.A. in international political economy from the University of California Berkeley

Research Interests

- Comparative political violence
- Paramilitary groups and violent non-state actors
- South and Central Asia

DR. MATTHEW P. DEARING is Assistant Professor of Regional and Analytic Studies at the National Defense University. He has over 15 years of experience in the Department of Defense community, including research on international security and comparative political violence, with fieldwork in Africa and Afghanistan. As an ethnographer working with U.S. Special Operations and the International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, he has designed collection and analysis protocols for complex multi-methods research projects in austere conflict environments.

His qualitative research findings and methodological techniques are published in scholarly, peer-reviewed journals to include: Foreign Policy, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, Stability: International Journal of Security and Development, and Special Operations Journal.

Dr. Dearing received a B.A. in International Political Economy from the University of California Berkeley; M.A. in Regional Security Studies at the Naval Postgraduate School; and Ph.D. in Security Studies at the Naval Postgraduate School. His current research focuses on the behavior of armed non-state actors and their influence in the process of state formation.